From the Board of Directors

The Bartlett Historical Society depends on membership dues, donations, and fund raising events for our financial survival. Your board of directors has put forth considerable effort in promoting the Society's mission statement as well as planning for future expanded projects and programs. Although our membership has grown considerably over the past several years, it represents a small portion of our population. If you are already a member, thank you for your support; if not, we would appreciate your considering a membership. It's your town and your history; help us to keep it alive.

Since its inception, the historical society has been operating with a very small core of dedicated volunteers (small as in four or five) and it is impossible for them to physically maintain the same level of personal commitment that the society has been fortunate enough to receive thus far. If, in the immediate future we do not receive commitments from other members and interested individuals to serve on our committees and to assist with our programs, projects and events, we certainly could be in jeopardy of maintaining the Society. Please, won't you consider volunteering some time?

BHS member, David Eliason, Appointed as Website Administrator

At their regular monthly meeting on April 9th, the Board of Directors appointed BHS member, Dave Eliason, as administrator of the BHS website, www.bartletthistory.org. Dave brings a new enthusiasm to the project and we are quite sure that you will see a new addition each time you log on. Welcome aboard Dave.

The directors also wish to acknowledge the services of Kathi McGraw who is responsible for researching and establishing the website. Kathi has masterfully managed the website for the past few years. Thank you, Kathi.

KATHLEEN HOWARD APPOINTED CURATOR

At their meeting on April 9th, the BHS Board of Directors appointed member, Kathleen Howard as curator of the Society collections.

Kathy has been a BHS member since 2007 when she relocated from CT to her vacation home in Intervale.

Kathy holds a Master's degree in Library Sciences from Simmons College in Boston, and her employment background includes, Bayer Healthcare Pharmaceuticals as a Senior Information Scientist; Hobart and William Smith Colleges as an Assistant Librarian for Technical Services; Wake Forest University/Bowman Gray School of Medicine as an Acquisitions Librarian/Faculty Publications Librarian; and, Yale University as a Reference and Technical Services Librarian.

She has embarked on her service by cataloging the collections using our Past Perfect software program and by organizing and grouping the collections.

We are indeed fortunate to have the volunteer services by one of her education, employment background and interest in history. Welcome aboard, Kathy.

“Webster tells us that a glen is a space between hills or mountains. This is the name given to the little hamlet that lies between the presidential range and mountains of less repute. Encircled by their protecting sides, we do not fear the cyclone of the plains. Here the Saco famed in story and song, drains the valley. In olden time the inland state, Vermont, had to obtain its supplies from the seaport, by following its course. At the present time railways furnish these necessities at less cost.

There is the maternal home of A. W. Greely, who commanded an expedition to the Arctic. The writer remembers an incident that occurred in the schoolhouse situated near the banks of the stream. Some rude boys were indulging in loud whispers and otherwise disturbing a meeting that was being held, when a devout old lady rose in her wrath and said in a loud voice, ‘Jeremia-ah, if you don’t stop making such a noise, I shall call your name right out here in meeting.’ It is needless to say that Jeremiah stopped.

As we follow the course of the stream towards the east we pass through a settlement known as Hilltown, and come to the place where Lady Blanch Murphy died. Here she instituted the first Christmas celebration. Her gifted pen only could describe the beautiful scenery. At the time she lived, her descriptions of the dwellings was a comparison to the cabins of Connought, Ireland, but they have been replaced by better structures. In no place, can we find better or more peacefully disposed people. We are near Conway, so we retrace our steps and stand on the three-span bridge at the confluence of the Saco and Rocky Branch. We are quite near the celebrated Bartlett Boulder, a relic of the glacial period.

On turning to the right we come to Jericho, a namesake of the walled city of Bible times. On we go by a circuitous route that leads to Iron Mt. We are told that years ago quantities of ore was found in this place, and of so fine quality that a razor was manufactured as a specimen.

There is a footpath leading through Fernald’s pasture. So we will take it as it leads to Goodrich Falls. Here is a grand work of nature, an immense waterfall. A gentleman of artistic talents has built a residence in full view of the cascade. What dreams of grandeur and sublimity must fill his soul in viewing this wonderful work. As we cross the bridge we hear the whining of the power house of the Eltric Co. Words cannot describe the beautiful scenery but we turn our steps towards home and wonder why man should trespass on beautiful in nature. -source: The White Mountain Reporter in 1898 from the correspondent.

CELEBRATING THE VILLAGE OF GLEN

The history of the village of Glen, aka Centre Bartlett and Glen Station, may not be filled with accounts of the social activities as in Lower Bartlett or with the commerce and industry as in Upper Bartlett, but it has its families. The early pioneer families of Emery and Harriman in 1777 were soon followed by the Thompsons and Stilphens, Halls, Stantons and Cobbs. By the mid 1800's many of the families who settled in Glen many of whom still reside in Glen today.

We have searched the history books for interesting particulars regarding the early Glen families and chose the Emery and Cobb families for this article.

Rev. Benjamin Willey, in his 1856 Incidents in White Mountain History recalls the Emery brothers thus: "Most amusing stories are told of these brothers Emery. Enoch and Humphrey were their names, the mention of which, to this day, will provoke a smile. In their general characteristic they differed almost as much as it is possible for two individuals to differ. Enoch was frank, open generous and manly in his nature, while Humphrey was sullen, obstinate and contrary. Humphrey had been haying. He was returning at the close of the day to his house with a large load, which he was drawing with a small yolk of oxen. On his way was a sharp, steep hill, which he was much afraid his oxen would be unable to surmount with the load. He was much worried, and it was with considerable anxiety that he reach the foot of the hill. Here he accidentally was met by one of his neighbors. He had not time to tell him his fears before his neighbor had already said, 'Mr. Emery, your cattle will hardly be able to haul that load up this hill, will they?' This instantly roused Humphrey's opposition. Always differing, he could do no less than differ now. Not raising his head, he replied, in his sullen, dogged tone, 'They shall do it;' and, plunging the brad into his poor oxen, made good his word.

Though differing so much from each other in their dispositions, these brothers were uniformly kind and attached to each other. They accommodated themselves to their several peculiarities, agreeing in all things to agree and disagree. The expedients of Enoch to manage Humphrey were many and ingenious.

In the depth of winter, once, both these brothers, living near each other, went into the woods to get out some timber. The cold was very intense, and, before they could get fairly to work, so as to warm themselves, Humphrey became very much chilled. Enoch felt the cold, but not so severely. He realized, however, that he needed a fire, and perceived that Humphrey needed it more than himself. The first thing for them, therefore, was a fire. Having fire-works with him, and being most active at the time, Enoch set himself to kindle one. But his fire-works did not work well. He failed to get from them, as soon as he expected, what he sought; and seeing Humphrey sinking under the cold and fearing to consume any more time in trails upon them, lest Humphrey should perish before he succeeded, he resolved on some other expedient to warm him. He made appliance to his temper, which he knew to be generally quick and irritable. But this failed for some time, owing to Humphrey's being so benumbed with the cold. At length, however, he succeeded. He was roused. Then all that concerned Enoch was to keep out of his way. They ran over bushes and stumps and logs till they both dripped with perspiration."

Another account by Willey of an Emery family early in Bartlett - "Rocky Branch, a stream tributary to the Saco, empties into it near the centre of town. It runs with a rapid current, most of the way from its starting, over a rocky bed, as its name indicates, till it mingles with its confluent stream. It rises very rapidly in times of great rains, as do most other streams in the regions. At the time of the great disaster near the Notch, when my brother's family were destroyed, it was the scene of a most thrilling incident.

Previous to this time, near where it flows into the Saco, on a spot of level, smooth land, familiarly called Jericho, a man by the name of Emery had built a small log cabin, and moved his family into it. In the night, the same on which the great disaster occurred on the Saco, this stream, in the vehemence of its rapid, high-swollen current, brought down so many trees, and rocks, and logs, from the land along its banks, that it formed a sort of dam just below the spot on which the cabin stood. This made a pond of water, which started the cabin from its foundation, and buoyed it up on its surface like a boat. Here the family, were in the depth of a dark stormy night, with the water roaring in their ears, at the mercy of an angry flood. Their feelings in this situation can much better be imagined than expressed. They did the best they could, went into the highest part of the cabin, and there awaited the fearful issue. They expected every instant to be engulfed in the waters. For long hours, with little to be seen, but almost everything dreadful to be heard, they held death steadily before them. Their prospect of escape, under the circumstances, was the frailest imaginable. But they survived the peril. The waters at last subsided, their little ark rested on a miniature Ararat, and the family escaped to the mountains. For deep tragic interest this holds a place next in order to the great Notch disaster itself."

Samuel Cobb, son of Andrew Cobb and Betsy Irish, was born 11 Mar 1785 in Limington, Maine. He is believed to have lived in the Falmouth/Portland area prior to bringing his family to Glen in the 1830's. While still in Maine, Samuel married, Ellen Neale, who was born in Maryland. His family included, at least: Betsey, b. abt. 1818 and married at Bartlett on 14 Mar 1838 William Copp, Jr. of Jackson; Francis Dunn b. 20 April 1819; Ellen, b. abt. 1824; Mary b. abt 1828; Gardner, b. abt. 1829; Mariah H., b. 20 Nov 1831; Charles, b. 11 Nov 1833; Esther, b. abt. 1836 and Eliza A., b. abt. 1841.

Deacon Samuel Cobb died 8 Dec. 1854 at 69 years. His wife, Ellen, died 22 Aug 1882 at 89 yrs., 6 dys. Both Deacon Samuel and his wife, Ellen, along with their children, Charles and Mariah are buried in the Glen cemetery along with other of our pioneer settlers, many of those graves are in poor condition from a lack of proper care.

Samuel's daughter, Francis Dunn, was the second wife of Joseph Balch Greely of Newburyport, Mass. To them was born a son, Adolphus Washington Greely, on 27 March 1844.

Adolphus began his military career with the 19th Massachusetts Infantry during the Civil War. He saw battles at Antietam and Fredricksburg and was wounded on three occasions. In March 1867 he entered the Regular Army as a Second Lieutenant in the 36th Infantry.

In 1881 Greely volunteered for a scientific expedition to the Arctic being planned by the Army. He was placed in command of a 25 man party sent to establish a meteorological observation station to collect astronomical and polar magnetic data. They established base camp at Ellsmere Island. The year-long mission was extended by two years as two relief ships failed to reach the group encamped at Fort Conger. Finally, at the persistence of his wife, Henrietta, Greely and the other survivors were rescued in 1884. He was promoted to Captain in 1886 and for the next 20 years was responsible for the construction of tens of thousands of miles of telegraph lines and submarine cables. He was also head of the Weather Service until it was transferred to the Department of Agriculture in 1891. He was promoted to Major General in 1906 and retired from the Army in 1908. After a trip around the world, he helped found the National Geographic Society and the first free public library in Washington, D. C. He wrote several books in addition to the official and scientific reports on the expedition. He died in Washington, D. C. on October 20, 1935 and is buried at Arlington National Cemetery.

On Tuesday, August 18th at 6:30 p.m. at the Bartlett Elementary School, a New Hampshire Humanities Council program, with Marcia Schmidt Blaine - "A Woman That Keeps Good Orders": Women, Tavern Keeping and Public Approval Government regulations, licensing, handling drunks, controlling the flow of information: why would the government allow women to run a tavern? When her husband died in 1736, Ann Jose Harvey became the owner of a prominent Portsmouth, New Hampshire tavern and sole guardian of at least seven small children. For at least twenty years, Ann Harvey ran the increasingly prosperous tavern. Using documents related to Ann Harvey Slayton's 18th century tavern, we will explore the world of female tavern keepers. A tavern was potentially the most disruptive spot in town. Why would a woman want to keep one? Why would her community approve of it and why would the government allow it? Please support the Society with your presence at our programs.
